Speaker Remarks for Clemens Cycle for Cancer June 2012

Welcome to the 2012 Clemens Cycle for Cancer.

I echo the gratitude already expressed by Cristlyn and Jenny , and I want to add a few special thanks. To my family Holly, Jason, Julia, and Andy. My siblings Mark, Jerry, Steve, Bill, Linda, and Bob and their families. Most especially to Dad & Mom who grace us with inspiration and heroism from heaven.

Thank YOU for making our tenth annual event the best to date. You make Clemens Cycle for Cancer honorable and inspirational.

If you are returning to us, welcome back. If this is your first Clemens Cycle for Cancer welcome to our family. We hope you commit to annually join us in honor of your hero and celebration of your inspiration.

In 2003, my family accepted a vocation to improve lives of cancer patients and their families. Years earlier, Mom became our hero while losing a difficult fight with her oncology. When we started Clemens Cycle for Cancer, Dad faced his own cancer battle with inspiring spirit for life. I'd like to wish all Dads a happy Father's Day this weekend. Most, if not all of you, share similar experiences that inspire you to join us today.

Richard Clemens, Hawk100 President, welcomes cyclists to the Clemens Cycle for Cancer family in 2011.

June 16, 2012, Richard Clemens, Hawk100 president, gave opening remarks to hundreds of cyclists riding the Tenth Clemens Cycle for Cancer in Centerville, Ohio. As Clemens Cycle for Cancer, founder Mr. Clemens put numbers to heroism and inspiration. The event improves lives of cancer patients and their families who receive care at Miami Valley Hospital. Here, Mr. Clemens shares his comments.

As president of Hawk100, I am a numbers guy, a left-brained math man who analyzes securities, manages investments and advises wealth for a career. Numbers give vital information and tell stories. I want to share a story of numbers with you.

Digital despair.

1,638,910 The American Cancer Society estimates that many people in the US will hear 3 words in 2012, "You have cancer." 66,560 will hail from Ohio. Many cancer patients will embark on a protocol of oncology that will nearly constantly count their blood cells keeping them alive. Neutropenia is a condition that cancer patients suffer from low blood counts caused by typical chemotherapy treatments that kill normal cells together with offending cancer. Some will have surgery to remove tumors, organs, or appendages leading to despair and depression.

What's being counted	What's normal	What's concerning
White blood cells	3,500 to 10,500	Below 1,000
Hemoglobin	13.5 to 17.5 for men 12 to 15.5 for women	Below 8
Platelets	150,000 to 450,000	Below 20,000

Gauges for complete blood counts provided by The Mayo Clinic.

3-legged hero's hope.

Cancer is not uniquely human. Animals can offer heroic insights into the human spirit and our ability to persevere. My son, Andy, introduced my family to a remarkable story of a dog named Annie who "loses a leg but finds her way."

Annie lost her front-left leg to cancer. She overcame the disease and despair to live a full life after realizing she could run using just 3 legs. In so doing, Annie became a 3-legged hero whose renewed spirit for life gave healing comfort to cancer patients and amputees.

I invite author, cancer survivor and owner of the late Annie, Sandy Philipson to share her first person perspective with you.

Inspiring numbers.

My bike has 32 spokes. If one were to break, it would frustrate my riding. If I had to ride with 1 leg or 1 arm, Annie's story would help me persevere. Your story connects me with the personal trial that too many cancer patients face. Thanks, Sandy.

Through 10 years, you—the CCC family of cyclists, volunteers, and supporters—have made inspiring numbers. We've pedaled over 38,000 miles and raised over $100,000. That amount may not cure cancer, but it does improve lives for the 66,000 cancer patients and their families right here in Ohio.

Of the hundreds of cyclists to participate over the years, one has ridden all 10 years and has traveled 38,000 miles cumulatively to get here each year. My brother, Bill, thank you.

A half dozen cyclists completed the first stage of two days in the inaugural Clemens Cycle for Cancer, October 2003.

When you ride, ride with purpose. Pedal each stroke in honor of your hero. Climb each hill in celebration of your inspiration. Tell a number of stories about your heroes and inspirations.

Remember today you improved lives of cancer patients and your Clemens Cycle for Cancer family.

Kindly remove your helmets and bow your heads in thoughtful, personal prayer for cancer patients, survivors, and the souls of those who have passed and for the safety of today's cyclists.

Please place your helmets on and ride safely.
